Tattoo complications

The popularity of tattoos and permanent make-up has increased enormously worldwide.

Unfortunately, chronic tattoo complications occur in 6 to 8% of tattooed people. These complications range from infections and allergic reactions to autoimmune diseases such as sarcoidosis. This article discusses the complications and possible treatment.

Sirolimus shows promise in treatment of vascular malformations

70-80% of patients with vascular malformations benefit from treatment with sirolimus. This is evident from recently published results of a large study (phase III, VASE) in which sirolimus is used for the treatment of vascular malformations. This groundbreaking information opens new possibilities for the treatment of slow-flow vascular malformations and offers hope for individuals affected by this condition.
